The Me-in-We Extractor™

Stop Hiding Behind Team Projects

Extract YOUR specific contributions from group work and showcase your individual value

The Problem

Most students hide behind "we" language

You list "Team Capstone Project" and describe what the team built.

You use "we" language throughout your resume.

The recruiter has no idea what YOU actually did.

The Method

Force a distinction between the project's success and
YOUR contribution

Strip Away the "We"

Even if it was a team effort, every resume bullet point must describe YOUR specific contribution.

L²

What YOU Did

Focus on these specific contributions:

- The specific gear YOU designed
- The code YOU committed
- The analysis YOU ran
- The decision YOU influenced

Example: Before & After

X BEFORE (WE-LANGUAGE)

"We developed a mobile app for campus navigation"

✓ AFTER (ME-LANGUAGE)

"Designed and implemented the GPS tracking module using Swift, reducing location accuracy errors by 40%"

How to Apply It

Find all "we" statements

Search your resume for words like "we", "our team", "the group"

Ask: What did I personally do?

Identify your specific tasks, decisions, and deliverables

Rewrite with "I" language

Use action verbs that start with "I": Designed, Implemented, Analyzed, Led

Add specificity

Include tools used, metrics achieved, and technical details

Key Takeaway

"We built an app" tells the recruiter nothing.

"I designed the GPS module using Swift" shows exactly what you contributed.

Your resume is about YOU, not the team.
